

DORSEY'S EASTERN VISIT.

HALF OF HIS BIG RANCH SOLD TO JOHN K. ALLEY AND COL. INGERSOLL.

Announced as President of the Association that he would be witness at the White House, and Refusing to Go There—'I propose to drive the knife to the hilt with the President's own hands on the Capitol grounds, Feb. 15—Senator Dorsey recently found it necessary to come to Washington. He was warned before he left New Mexico that his arrest was contemplated by Attorney-General Brewster. Why such action was thought of, it is difficult to say.

When a few weeks ago, Chief Justice Axtell of New Mexico enjoined Dorsey against taking possession of such part of the property as was claimed by Mr. Bosler, Dorsey determined to go possession of that property in another way. The great ranch lies at the foot of the Bataan mountains in New Mexico, and is watered by the Chino Salinas river, and by several smaller streams. The land for over fifty miles in one direction and forty in another, was owned by Dorsey. His range crossed the boundary into Texas, and stretched far out on the plains toward the foot hills of the Rocky mountains.

There were immense ranges of Government land, on which his cattle fed, enclosed with fences many miles long. In one of the choicest of these ranges, a tract about ten miles long and a little wider, there was a fine stone house, with a great building for the herdsmen or cowboys, and a great corral, there were immense ranges of Government land, on which his cattle fed, enclosed with fences many miles long. In one of the choicest of these ranges, a tract about ten miles long and a little wider, there was a fine stone house, with a great building for the herdsmen or cowboys, and a great corral, there were immense ranges of Government land, on which his cattle fed, enclosed with fences many miles long.

The story now Mr. Bosler became interested in this property has often been told, but never with accuracy. Dorsey, when he was pushed by the Government prosecution, not only found a time when he needed ready money, but a good deal of ready money, and it was necessary that a first-class business man with plenty of capital should take a personal interest in the cattle ranch. Dorsey had been obliged to neglect it. His cattle were straying away; the herdsmen were getting careless, and there were some people who thought Dorsey was a good deal of a fool, and that he was not really actually taken out of his hands. To insure business management, no matter what might come, Dorsey organized a stock company, and sold Bosler a third interest in the stock for $200,000 in cash. Then a foreman whom Bosler knew was put there in charge.

Dorsey left the ranch not to be allowed to run down. After the trials were over, last spring, when Dorsey returned to the ranch he found that matters were not going at all satisfactorily. Presently when he returned to the city, he found that it reached a point where there was some trouble, some force, and some danger of a fight. He found that the man who was in charge of the ranch, a man named Woodworth, was a man of a very different character from Dorsey's friends. Woodworth was a man of a very different character from Dorsey's friends. Woodworth was a man of a very different character from Dorsey's friends.

Dorsey and Ingersoll at once started for Washington. The man who attended to the Bosler estate, and Dorsey were closeted in Dorsey's private office. The man who attended to the Bosler estate, and Dorsey were closeted in Dorsey's private office. The man who attended to the Bosler estate, and Dorsey were closeted in Dorsey's private office.

Dorsey speaks rather cautiously about the matter. He says that he has not yet decided whether he is a lion or a mouse. He says that he has not yet decided whether he is a lion or a mouse. He says that he has not yet decided whether he is a lion or a mouse.

What are the facts about the recent litigation respecting your ranch in New Mexico? I didn't know that I had a great ranch, but I did own a great deal of land. I had a great deal of land, and I had a great deal of land. I had a great deal of land, and I had a great deal of land.

Col. Mapleson Talks Vehemently About Mr. Abbey and his Management.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 10.—"My dear boy," said Col. Mapleson, "come up stairs, and I will talk to you about the hard lines of the Metropolitan Opera, which, I regret to say, is being run in a most unfortunate way. It doesn't seem to me that you know. He had his line of business as a theatrical manager, and I never interfered with him, and never tried to get into his pasture, but he came right over into mine and tried to drive me out of the field. Now, that wasn't quite square, was it? Abbey just didn't follow after all. He is not alone in this thing. A lot of rich fellows in New York went into the business, and thought if they could get rid of me they could make millions in the future. They went to Abbey and said: 'Here, now, how much will it take to drive the old man clear out of the field? We will give you $75,000 or $100,000, and they chipped in the amount. Well, they now find they are $250,000 out of pocket, and the old man is still on deck,' and the Colonel rubbed his knees softly and fairly boomed with satisfaction.

"It is simply another case of Jack Haverly," said Col. Mapleson. "I remember a friend of mine, James Wheeler, who once tried to corner the wheat market in Chicago. He got a bigger load than he could carry, and had to go down. Abbey's only object in the organization of a company was to crush me. He tried every possible means to get me out of the business, and he succeeded. He offered them three or four times the amount he was paying them, and they wouldn't take it. I advised them to do it for I knew he would hang himself if he got not enough. I had a contract with them for $400,000, and the paper was drawn and ready to sign, but it was on Friday, and my husband, my son, and my daughter, they were all in the city to sign that day. The next morning he comes to me and says: 'My dear Colonel, I met Meester Abby, and he offered me five thousand dollars. Now, what do you think of that?'

"Of course, I had to pay him the same, but it cost me $30,000 on the season, $50 a night for my son's carriage, and $100 a night for my son's carriage. My dear boy, Abbey offers me four times as much as I am getting, and I don't know what to do. I don't know what to do. I don't know what to do. I don't know what to do.

"I never received anything to speak of, my belief is about one-half of 1 per cent. If I had had half of that, I might have had 45 per cent. I don't know what to do. I don't know what to do. I don't know what to do. I don't know what to do.

Another Debate on Finance—Aid for the Flood Sufferers—Laughter in the House. WASHINGTON, Feb. 15.—The Senate spent most of the day again discussing Mr. McPherson's National Bank Note bill and the proposed amendments to it. Mr. Plumb argued against the bill. He said the national debt should be paid off as soon as possible, and what was the use of something like taking the bill of bank circulation as it was withdrawn from time to time. He offered an amendment providing for the issuing of Treasury notes to take the place of the circulation of the banks as it is surrendered.

Mr. Sherman's amendment, providing that if any of the bonds deposited for interest should be sold, that three per cent. addition should be issued equal to one-half the interest in excess of the three per cent. according to maturity, was voted down 42 to 7. The House resumed the debate on the Mississippi contingent election. Mr. Curtis, who took the lead in the debate, declared that the House, and demanded that he be sworn as a member. THE PRICE OF A DOWN-TOWN BUILDING SITE. Sidney De Kay and his wife have transferred to Charles H. Ray the property 5, 9, and 11 Broadway between Third and Fourth streets. The consideration of $250,000. They bought it in September last for an expressed consideration of $200,000. The property was sold to Charles H. Ray by the late John Jay, who had just bought it of the Manhattan Building Company. At the time this transfer there was some talk of building a stock exchange on the property.
